Gemma Rose is the proud owner of a quaint tearoom which has become quite popular with locals and tourists alike, located in the midst of the university town, Oxford. She has a cute tabby named "Muesli" who is full of fun and mischief. When this story begins, Gemma is shocked to learn that her mother has entered Muesli in a cat show to be held in the village fair. Her mother thinks that Muesli can compete against all the purebred show cats at the show, but Gemma knows Muesli is not a show cat, and hates to think that her mother will be embarrassed when the judge sees Muesli and declares him ineligible. But she needn't worry, before the judge gets to see Muesli, one of the owners of purebreed show cats falls over and dies, presumably of a heart attack, and the show is cancelled. The dead woman is a most unpleasant person who wasn't liked by almost anybody in town, and Gemma has a slight suspicion that her death may not exactly have been natural, but the woman's doctor declares that she died a natural death (heart attack) and the matter is closed. The police detective who was at the scene (who happens to be Gemma's boyfriend Devlin O'Connor) refuses to investigate the death as a homicide, since there is absolutely no evidence that the woman was murdered. So it is now up to Gemma to try to get evidence that the death was in fact a homicide, and thereafter, to find the culprit. But was it really a homicide? After all, the woman did suffer from a heart condition and didn't follow her doctor's orders. Her heart was a ticking time bomb that could go off at any moment. What made Gemma think it was murder? And if it was, who was the murderer? You won't be able to guess easily, and it will take you all the way to the end before you learn what really happened.
